

Gary Claxton's down-home, G-rated humor has entertained audiences across the country. The "Mouth of the South" has kept audiences laughing from the Grand Ole Opry to Las Vegas, appeared on a variety of television programs, recorded several comedy albums, and loves to share his hillbilly humor at corporate, civic, and church events, as well as country fairs and festivals across America.

In hillbilly garb, Gary can cause tears of laughter with his stories and jokes while reminding audiences of cherished home-spun values. Gary never relates anything that can't be told at the local church.

Gary has shared the stage with such entertainers as Ray Stevens, Lee Greenwood, Kenny Rogers, and Roy Clark...just to name a few.

There were hard times for Gary growing up in Georgia. His uneducated father worked for farmers. Including an uncle, there were 10 mouths to feed, but during the lean times, his mother instilled in Gary good, basic values like loving God, respecting your elders, and keeping clean. Most of Gary's humor, stories, and jokes are reminisces of this environment.

Gary loves people and would love to share his stories with your audience.
